Answers to common Questions

What is the expectation of my customers experience?

Very Good. Once your customer registers the Gas to Cash Card they are sent their 1st voucher. The customer sends the voucher and a $10.00 or more proof of purchase receipt to the fulfillment center. The customer will receive a $10.00 check and the 2nd voucher. The process continues and the customer is reminded of the process with each voucher received.

What happens if a customer has a question or would like to know the status of their check?

The customer can simply call our customer service number and will be helped by one of our professional agents.

Do rebate offers really work?

Beginning in 1970, enthusiasm for rebates continues today. In 2005, consumers redeemed 5 billion in rebates worth $3 billion. And for marketers, rebates remain an effective method of stimulating product sales, driving in-store traffic, creating new retail points and collecting consumer data that can be used for bounce back offers...

What are the different ways my customer can receive the Cash to Gas Card once they qualify?

It's Simple!

1. If you require a $100 spend per visit;

- A. Company Representative can distribute the card to the customer
- B. Customer takes $100 register tape to service desk for distribution

2. Use your loyalty card and spending is tracked over four weeks;

- A. The retailer sends us a file of all who qualify and we will mail Gas to Cash Cards for an additional fee of $0.50 per qualified customer. Fee includes postage and handling.

Gasoline Vouchers Used to Draw in Tourists

MINNEAPOLIS -- In the latest gimmick to persuade people to ignore the nation's high gasoline prices and get into their vehicles for summer vacations, an Associated Press report notes that tourism officials in Iowa and South Dakota are offering gas vouchers to potential tourists. So are bed-and-breakfast operators in Wisconsin, and even vacation towns including Aspen, Colo.; Branson, Mo.; and Virginia Beach, Va.

However, according to the American Automobile Association, the ploy may not be necessary. Although national gas prices are up 75 cents in the past year, demand is also up 1.5 percent.

"In textbook terms, you'd think prices would affect demand, but it doesn't," Dawn Duffy, spokeswoman for AAA Minneapolis, told AP. "Actions speak louder than words, but that doesn't keep people from complaining about this."

The Travel Industry Association of America estimates that summer travel nationwide will increase about 1 percent over last summer, although that could change if prices get over $3 a gallon.

The institute reports there are free fuel offers in at least 20 states.

The biggest program is under way in South Dakota, where the state tourism office is mailing 35,000 vouchers worth $20 each to potential visitors in Minnesota and nine other states, but South Dakotans themselves don't qualify.

The "Twenty Bucks for the Road" offer was originally planned for only 3,000 vouchers, but tourism officials said they were stunned by the demand. They're no longer taking applications for vouchers.

"It turns out that the promotion was announced just as gas prices started spiking," Billie Jo Waara, who oversees the program for South Dakota Tourism, said in the report. "It helped put South Dakota on the map."

The program was primarily planned to promote ethanol-blended fuel and the state's tourist attractions -- not as a promotion to stop a decline in visits to the state, she said.

"Tourism is a big business in South Dakota, and the affordability of gas is a constant worry in the business," Waara said.

In Iowa, the Kum & Go convenience store chain and the state tourism office is offering gas cards worth $50 to people who sign up online or at the state's 20 Welcome Centers. While 1,500 people have entered online, only 23 gas cards will be distributed.

"We simply wanted to encourage people to travel to Iowa," Nancy Landess, manager of the state tourism office, told AP. "We know people are paying attention to gas prices, and if it encourages them to fill up at Kum & Go, even better."

In Wisconsin, the Wisconsin Bed and Breakfast Association is offering $20 gas vouchers to people who stay at their properties.

Not everybody is jumping on the voucher bandwagon, however. The news agency reports that tourism officials in Minnesota have concluded that it's a solution to a problem that doesn't exist.

"Frankly, we think there's no need to, because we haven't seen any reduction in travel because of high gas prices," said Joan Hummel, a spokeswoman for Explore Minnesota, the state's travel office. "It's grabbed attention and become a hot topic around the country, but people aren't willing to give up their summer vacation."
